

Articulation Cards

- The black line version of the articulation cards are a great ink-saving option.
- Cards are borderless and can quickly be cut on a paper trimmer or with scissors.

Therapy Ideas

- Print two copies of your articulation cards and play a lotto or pairs game.
- Use counters to cover target words after they are said correctly.
- Use the articulation cards with your favorite toys in clinic to make therapy playful and fun!
- Make up the spinner by attaching the arrow with a split pin. Your student spins and then selects the appropriate number of cards to drill.

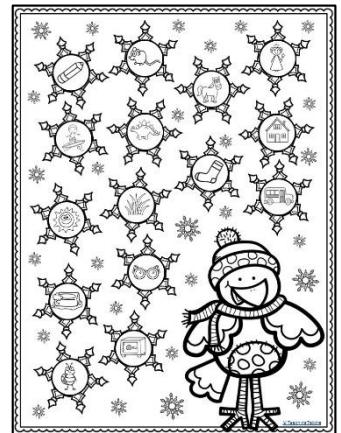

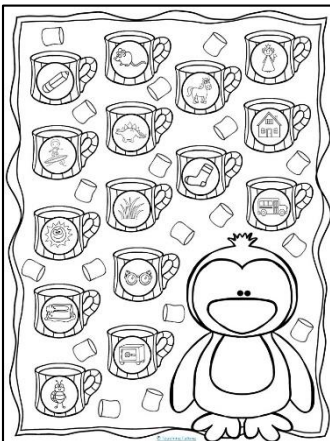

A coloring page for a penguin-themed activity. It features a large penguin at the bottom right, surrounded by 15 red mugs and 15 ice cubes. Each mug contains a different illustration: a pencil, a mouse, a horse, a girl, a house, a boy, a dinosaur, a boot, a bus, a flower, a girl with glasses, a frog, a boy, a girl, and a boy. The page is framed by a red wavy border.

© Teaching Talkings

Alternatively, use a bingo dabber and the articulation cards. Have the student search for the target word on the sheet and mark it off with the dabber after they say it correctly.

3 Designs for Each Sound

Roll, Say & Color Worksheets

These worksheets are ideal for mixed groups. Each of your students can color the same design, even when their target words are different! The 6 different worksheets are available for all speech sounds with 5 target words per sheet.

Review the key and the target words with your students. Identify the correct colors needed for the picture.

Students roll the die, say the appropriate target word and then color an area on the worksheet. Repeat until the picture is complete!

